Seven young girls of the society set were formally introduced at the ball and dinner following. The 200 guests of the club were participants in the evening's festivities, and the list of dancers was augmented by out of town guests. The ball room of the club was decorated to represent a Japanese garden. The grand march began at 9:15 o'clock. Dinner was served at 11:30 o'clock, and places were set for 226 guests. Two tables were reserved for the debutantes, their escorts and friends. The program included twenty-four dances.

From the trellis hung festoons of vines and yellow chrysanthemums, relieved by bright colored Japanese lanterns. The walls were paneled with sketches of Japanese life done in green and white. Beneath the balcony walls and above the panels hung five dragon heads also arranged in the mouths of the dragons, and lights were hidden in the many lanterns strewn about the trellis work.

Chrysanthemums and vines were massed about the musical instruments, practically obscuring them from view. The national flag hung at one side of the stage. In the dining room only decorations of little flags and pot flowers for the tables were used. The color scheme of red, white and blue.

At the conclusion of the march the guests were formed in four lines facing the orchestra. The flag was unfurled to the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," followed by "Dixie". Souvenir programs were distributed. The programs were used as favors. The cover was done in Japanese design, and on the inner page carried the picture of the debutantes in a panel executed in butterfly design.
